PREFACE.

THESE notes begin usually with the colonist on his arrival in America or as soon thereafter as he appears on the list of taxpayers. In the case of Deputy Governor Samuel Symonds there is already in print a full description of his ancestry in England and that of his wife, and some of the material has been reproduced here. In the case of Ellis Lewis the ancestry has been fully described in Connor's Pedigree of David Lewis, and to that work the reader is referred for details.

This is in no way a family history, but is strictly confined to the direct ancestor in each generation, brothers and sisters and their descendants being entirely ignored. A full list of all the descendants of Robert Greenough would alone make a considerable volume and could only be gathered in New England.

The references to volume and page of printed matter relating to any ancestor are intended not only to enable all descendants to possess themselves at will of such information, but especially to enable any particular descendant to place himself at once in the line of new and enlarged development of the ancestral history whenever he may so desire.

m. Elizabeth Paggot. She d. 1717.

Nicholas Newlin, an English gentleman of good birth and liberal means, joined the Friends, and to escape the religious oppression to which they were subjected in England moved with his family to Mount Mellick, Queens County, Ireland. While living in that place he purchased lands in Pennsylvania from William Penn, and in 1683 came to America and settled at Concord, Chester County, Pennsylvania. In 1684 he was commissioned by William Penn one of the Justices of the Court of said county, and in 1685 he was called to the Council of the Governor.

He had four children. The first was Nathaniel, b. 1660.

- b. in Wales, circa 1680.
 - d. at Wilmington, Del., June 30, 1750.
- Came to America 1708.

The ancestry of Ellis Lewis is fully described by P. S. P. Conner, Esq., in his "Lewis Pedigree," running back for many generations. Ellis Lewis was born in Wales, in or about the year 1680; his father dying while he was quite young, his mother married Owen Robert. Later they went to Ireland and thence to Pennsylvania, Ellis Lewis' certificate of removal being dated at Mount Mellick, Ireland, the 25th day of the 5th month, 1708. Upon his arrival in Pennsylvania Ellis Lewis went first to Haverford, in the neighborhood of his cousins, the Ellises, Rowland Ellis and his family not yet having removed into Gwynedd. Subsequently he (E. L.) settled in Kennett Township, Chester County, Pa., where he was highly esteemed, being "a man of good understanding" and long an Elder of Friends. He was twice married; first, in 1713, at Concord Meeting, to Elizabeth Newlin, the mother of his four children; secondly, to Mary Baldwin, a widow (at Fall's Meeting, Bucks County, 11, 1 mo., 1723), who survived him. He died at Wilmington, Del., June 30, 1750, and was buried at Kennett. Will proved in Wilmington, Oct. 29, 1750.

m. Mary J. Paxton.

She was b. May 22, 1724, and d. December 29, 1777.

Of Michael Israel but little is known. In 1749 to 1751 he lived in Philadelphia, and two children dying in infancy were buried in Christ Church ground. He died in 1754; left no will, and his estate was admin. same year. There were several children. The eldest son, Israel Israel (son of Michael and Mary).

m. September 7, 1775, to Hannah Erwin.

Had fifteen children. He was High Sheriff of Philadelphia, and held other offices.

His daughter Hannah married Col. Davenport, U. S. A., and d. s. p.

His daughter Mary married Charles Ellet 1st, of Philadelphia. Their son, Charles Ellet 2d, was Brig.-Gen'l in the War of the Rebellion, and rendered distinguished service, as did also his son, Charles Rivers Ellet, who was Colonel and served on the Mississippi River. Mary Ellet, daughter of Charles Ellet 2d, is married to William D. Cabell, of Virginia, now resident of Washington, D. C.

General Alfred Ellet (son of Charles and Mary, and brother of Charles Ellet 2d) was Brigadier-General in the War of the Rebellion, and rendered distinguished service. He has descendants.

Samuel Israel (son of Michael and Mary) moved to Baltimore, and lived there until his death. He left descendants.

Abigail Israel (daughter of Michael and Mary) remained unmarried.

In the publication of the Genealogical Society of Pennsylvania, Vol. I, No. 1, p. 34, in the list of taxable residents in 1678, on the east side of the Delaware River, in New Jersey, opposite to New Castle in Delaware, and subject evidently at that date to the Delaware jurisdiction, there is the name of Jan Harinsen Izrull. This is possibly the ancestor (grandfather) of Michael Israel, but no such connection has, as yet, been made out. The name sounds in part Dutch and part Swede.

Joseph Israel's Revolutionary sword is now in the collection of Hist. Soc. of Penna., but we have not the record of his service. He was High Sheriff of New Castle County, Del., for one term. He was first a ship owner and followed the sea in the West India trade, but about 1788 bought the mills at Cristine, Del., with the large property attached, and lived there until his death. EBENEZER GREENOUGH.

WHEN Ebenezer Greenough, a lad of twenty, crossed the threshold of Harvard College, where he had graduated with honor, he was met with the news that his father had been suddenly reduced from a very prosperous condition to an estate so narrow that he could no longer render assistance to the son who was about to make his way through the world. A horse and fifty dollars constituted the extent of his outfit, and it is characteristic of the man, (and it is the pride of his descendants to recall), that the first moneys earned by him were scrupulously saved, and were remitted as soon as it was possible to do so, in payment of these sacred advances.

These moneys were acquired at Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania, where Charles Hall, Esquire, a resident of Sunbury and the leading lawyer of Middle Pennsylvania, noticed him, and suggested to him that he take up the study and practice of the law. He followed this advice and, removing to Sunbury, studied law under Mr. Hall, and was admitted to the bar. After his happy marriage with Abigail Israel, he settled in Danville, where his eldest daughter, Susan, was born, but he soon returned to Sunbury, and there he became remarkably successful. At that time the largest practice and the greatest reputations at the country bar were made in the trial of suits in which titles to land were in question, and Ebenezer Greenough, by reason of his learning and skill in this respect, speedily became the bar-leader of that portion of the country, and maintained with ease this position until his death, when, in the language of Robert Grier, one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, "the last great light of land-law in Pennsylvania died out."

He was in the twentieth year of his age when he left Harvard, and he had just completed his sixty-fourth year when he died. During the intervening period he had amassed a fortune, had founded a family which to-day (1895) has multiplied and ramified in many directions (every member of which regards his name with veneration), and he had achieved a professional reputation which surpassed any other in Pennsylvania, west of Philadelphia and east of the Alleghenies: and yet there was not a day of his life that he did not suffer physically from a disease of the heart which may be said to have attended him from his birth. His earliest recollection was that of sitting on his mother's knee undergoing excruciating pain which she vainly attempted to alleviate.

Much against his will, but in order to effect specific reforms, he served a term in the Legislature, in consequence whereof the scope and stringency of the anti-gambling and anti-lottery acts were increased. Nothing could reconcile him to a political life: he was a lawyer, and his delight was in the law. His contributions to the legislation of the times bore upon the law. By far the most important of these was the act of Assembly limiting the lien of a judgment. The notions of all the prominent men at the bar throughout the State had been sought upon this important subject, and manifold had been the forms and suggestions sent to Harrisburg; they varied from the extremely long and verbose form, sent by the bar-leader of Philadelphia, to the few and terse words submitted by Mr. Greenough; these were adopted, and thus he became the father of this statute. Nothing more important in the way of legislation can be conceived of, when one reflects, that it regulates and controls the great mass of debt in Pennsylvania, and that not a single transaction upon which a judgment may be rendered can occur without being remotely, if not immediately, within the purview of this act.

I have the word of the late Francis W. Hughes, of Pottsville, Pennsylvania, for it (he himself eminent as a jurylawyer) that he had never known Ebenezer Greenough's equal in trying causes; Judge Grier's opinion of him, as a land lawyer, was sustained by all the leading lawyers of the day in Middle and Eastern Pennsylvania; by the Mallerys, Loesers, Bannans, Armstrongs, Comlys, and by those they led. The late Chief Justice Woodward used to dwell upon his characteristics as a forensic orator. He described his style as "Ciceronian" in respect to the combination it presented of persuasion and argument, and as quiet and sympathetic, with lucidity itself in the statement of facts. He said that he was a master of good English, that his learning was inexhaustible and ready, and he regretted exceedingly that Mr. Greenough's addresses had not been reported, so as to serve as models of forensic argument and oratory. Of "the old bench" of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania (the bench before which his great triumphs were made), every member was his friend and admirer, and very few men enjoyed the respect and praise of the great Chief Justice Gibson as he did. "When Mr. Greenough rose," said Judge Woodward, "the court leaned forward, and sank back only after catching his last word. This intentness would be broken at times by rapid fires of questioning and disputing points." Undoubtedly, his greatest contribution to his profession, and his most enduring monument as a lawyer, was the establishment of the equitable principle, to its modern extent, in the action of ejectment; or, to express it differently, making the institution of an action of ejectment equivalent to filing a bill in equity. The establishment of this principle may be said to have revolutionized the land law of Pennsylvania; it proved to be one of the most beneficial principles ever evolved in the history of American law.

In 1857, the late Mr. Elliott, of Towanda, Pennsylvania, told me that at one time he had sat as jurymen in a case where Mr. Greenough had disputed the validity of a patent, on the ground that the principle of construction had already been applied by Julius Cæsar to his bridge across the Rhine, and that he sustained his contention and won his case. Had the instances of his fertility of resources, of his learning, of his skill in trying causes, and of snatching victory from defeat, which were recounted by his contemporaries, been collected, they would fill a volume, but I have said enough to show that bench, bar and jury regarded him as a remarkable man. His clients had the utmost confidence in him; and well might they have had it, for who could be more untiring in their service, or more painstaking and scrupulous in the custody of their property? Such was his reputation for integrity, and for the learning and skill special to trustees, that great trusts were constantly seeking his hands.

Never in Middle Pennsylvania had one been followed to his grave by so great a concourse of people as he was. The different bars sent their committees, his old clients came from far and near, and all his neighbors joined in the mournful procession. His kindness of heart made all sincere mourners, nor did the exercise of this kindness cease with his death, for when his will was opened it was found to contain an injunction of leniency to the point of forgiveness where the debtors had been unfortunate, and when his son came to examine his papers, he found that the bounty of his father had been exercised upon objects and to amounts little suspected.

Ebenezer Greenough, in personal appearance, was small and slightly built. He gave one the impression of being a delicately-constructed man; he had small hands and feet, his complexion was pink and white, and his voice was sweet and winning; but he was every inch a man. My latest recollection of him was when he was sixty-two years of age, and after I had enjoyed, during the nine years of my life, the undue affection of which the first grandchild is everywhere the recipient. It is hard for me, therefore, to realize the fact that so kindly and loving a man, though a mere youth, had driven so strong and so aggressive a judge as Cooper from the bench; that, before the Court, his irony was dreaded, and that, before the jury, his denunciation (exercised with great rarity) was feared. Yet such was the case, and it was his power to retaliate that made him so formidable an antagonist.

The portrait by Francis, now in my possession, does not do his pleasing, sympathetic expression justice, and the daguerreotype, taken in the last few days of life, has upon it the severity of approaching death; it represents a severe, patrician face.

One characteristic of him should not be omitted—the moderation of his ambition. This was spoken of during his life-time as a surprising thing in one of his powers, and sometimes as a regrettable thing; but his aversion to politics was too great to be overcome, and he declined even to go upon the bench. His elevation to the bench of the Supreme Court, strange to say, had among its advocates some prominent men of the Democratic party, though he had always been and always remained a Whig. The Governor expressed his great regret that he was prevented, solely by the contrariety of politics, from appointing a lawyer so distinguished. It was a matter of common notoriety that Mr. Greenough knew nothing of this friendly action on the part of the Berks County lawyers until the affair was over.

It will not be surprising that to one like me, whose earliest days were sweetened by his affection, he should seem a matchless man.

Antoninus thanked the gods for his noble grandfather, and I thank God for mine.
